

A new resource for small water supply operators!

We would like to announce the development of a new online resource for small water supply operators. Searching the internet for useful information can be frustrating and time consuming; SmallWaterSupply.org makes this process much more efficient and productive by providing an easy-to-use interface that returns only information directly relevant to water supply operations. Our staff is continually sifting through online resources to expand and maintain our databases. In addition to a blog that we keep updated with current news and highlights, our two most prominent developments to date are:

Events Calendar

- Includes workshops, classes, expos, training, and conferences
- Filters by topic, state, sponsor, etc.
- Provides links to more details and contact information for host organizations

Document Search

- Contains links gathered from technical assistance providers, state agencies, national websites, etc.
- Features interactive search capabilities for quick access to useful information
- Provides link summaries to provide value-added information
- Shares resources with a wider audience, while still crediting source organizations

We have extensive plans for additional features and functionality, including a user forum, an online training database, a careers page, and much more. We welcome any suggestions or comments.

Check us out today at: www.SmallWaterSupply.org